

Introduction

Autobiography of the author herself. She wrote about her academic life started at High School and told her readers what she felt in her mind in detail. When she went to the University, she took mathematics major and listened to what her father said to her that one can be a mathematician of first rank without having a head for figures. But throughout her life, she always met the different points of views between her and the people around were always evident. She said being the daughter of an associate professor in Mathematics was not easy. Although her ambition was to be a teacher like her grandfather and her father, her fortune never gave a chance to let her as a tutor in the University. She regretted that 'my life at the University was like a fool's paradise for more than 10 years with the hope to be a tutor'. This circumstance turned her interest to write and became a writer like her grandmother, KhinMyo Chit (writer of Colourful Burma and Anawrahta of Burma), but she said she became a writer because she had no other choice. 'Beggars cannot be choosers'.
