

The novel, "Student Boycotter" by Thein Pe Myint is a story about why the students of the University of Yangon refused to sit their examinations held in the academic year 1936, and went on boycott and voiced their grievances?

The university students of those days were not able to create the better educational atmosphere for them, in that the colonists were so crafty and the imperialists too prudent; younger brains thus could not pit their wits against with the big, broad and bullying brains of British masters of those days. Most came to university not with big purse but with strong patriotism; not with dreams of making themselves popular and prosperous but with deep determination of delivering their country from under the yoke of colonialism.

The novel, "Student Boycotter" will take readers to the Yangon University in her very younger days teeming with all kinds of students and then offer readers to observe the true state and situations of the university students' lives of those days, and then they will make reader actively take part in their endeavours and they will take readers to the Shwe Dagon Pagoda, making readers listen to their speeches, stay with them and then make readers drink watery tea and swallow mean meals and then the student boycotter will make readers laugh with them and cry with them and then.....
