

Upscale Water, a contemporary novel, is based on the theme of minor rape, which often comes to light in the changing values of Myanmar society. Nu May, the central character, is deflowered in her maidenhood, but she refuses to be "Fallen" and succeeds in rising up again.

The setting is the situation before the year 2015, wherein the budding role of Hluttaw and its legal deliberations are put into the story line. This novel has provoked a sense of encouragement and awareness in the hearts of some members of Myanmar womanhood, and as a best-selling novel, it has been reprinted several times.
